HER CARGO.

A Probability That the Lauranda Took or Munitions of War Near Cape May. CAPE MAY, N. J., May 12.-From an incident which occurred at sea off here Monday it may be that the steamship Laurada took no munitions of war aboard near New York, but that she received her cargo outside the three mile limit Monday afternoon. A large steamer was noticed by people on the shore Monday laying to some miles out and blowing off steam. Closer in shore was a schooner hove to. Monday afternoon a tug came down the coast from the north and another steamed out of Delaware bay. The tugs took the schooner in tow and steamed out to where the steamer was. The tugs and the schooner were alongside the steamer for some time, and what was unmistakably a transfer of cargo from the sailing vessel to the steamship was made. After the transfer had been made the tugs steamed

THE DEFENSE.

Crawford Argues for Scott Jackson's Life and Liberty.

He Attacks the Action of the Cincinnati Police in the Case.

Asserts That His Client Was Persecuted Outrageously by the Sweating Process— His Treatment Was Similar to That of the Spanish Inquisition.

NEWPORT, Ky., May 12.—Just before the time of opening court Tuesday morning Mrs. Jackson, mother of the prisoner. leaning on the arm of her daughter, Mrs. Post, came in and took an easy chair reserved for her. Mrs. Dr. Lewis was in the party and they all took seats about the prisoner's chair. Jackson was brought in a moment later and court was called to order. The jury filed in and there was a short delay caused by the non-appearance of Cal. Courton.

Col. Crawford.
At 9:40 Col. Crawford entered the courtroom and at once began his argument. In substance he said:

stance he said:
 "Gentlemen of the jury, I am here today, after listening to the evidence, to say what I can for this unhappy student, who is now entangled in the clutches of the law. When the police force of the city of Cincinnatt judge a man guilty they make him out guilty. I tell yeu that Scott Jackson was adjudged guilty by Piummer, Crim and McDermott at Greencastle on the 5th of February.
 "I do not question the testimony of Mayor
Caldwell or Crim or McDermott or Plummer,

Caldwell or Crim or McDermott or Plummer, they were telling the truth. I did not cross-examine the parents of the dead girl. I have examine the parents of the dead girl. I have the greatest respect and the greatest sympathy for them, my heart goes out to them in their sorty ow, but, gentlemen of the jury, there are two sides to this question. We have here the mother and sister of this unfortunate man this man who is a victim of a most dastardly persecution at the hands of a relentless police. It tell you the presention the man was

'I tell you the persecution this man was subjected to was outrageous. Think of the sweating process he was subjected to, of the long days and sleepless nights, without having a chance to remove his clothing. He was subjected to a steady fire of questions by police, newspaper men, and the hundreds of visitors. The Spanish inquisition pales into insignif-

"They talk about Jackson's brazen manner. but have you seen any brazenness, any posing, any affectation, any impudence? No, sir, you have not. Where is the evidence of mental distress? Why, when he was being traduced and cursed and insuited and called a vile murderer, when the bloody evidence was thrown into his face, he sat there a dignified man, an unsufficient wantleman. Could a suite man deaffected gentleman. Could a guilty man do that? No, sir, it was a mind free from guilt that was not affected by that spectacular show. Why, that was the filling in this case: it was slop and nonsense. At the very beginning of this case I was willing to admit that the clothing in court was that of Pearl Bryan, but they dragged the heartbroken mother in and made her go over the ghastly clothing of her murdered daughter, they called the aged father and the sister to the stand, and the neighbors too, to sister to the stand, and the neighbors, too, to go through this spectacular scene. I was will-ing to spare them all this, but no, the desire of the prosecution for the spectacular, their desire for notoriety, their desire to play to the grand stand, made them resort to this rot. Then, in his argument, Col. Nelson says that this architend went to Greencastle and then ruined, then murdered then robbed Pearl

Bryan.'
"Why. Scott Jackson came to Greencastle in the holidays of '94-'95, when he met Pearl Bryan. Did he go out there for the purpose of dissipation, did he go out there to loaf? No, sir, he went there to work and earn his living, and he worked in the office of Dr. Gillespie that spring and summer. And what was his reputation? Not a witness said it was bad; not one person came here and said his reputation was questionable, but many came and testified that his reputation was good, that it was good morally; that it was good in that it was good morally; that it was good in regard to veracity and truthfulness." Col. Crawford then read one of the letters

Jackson wrote Pearl Bryan.

"I want to say here that I don't blame the newspaper boys and the newspapers for printing the stories given them by the police and the prosecution. I tell you the prosecution's case was on dress parade. The defense could not give to the public what it intended to prove. What witnesses had to say. Why, if it had been given out these witnesses would have been pounced upon by the police and builled into submission. The power of the police is unlimited. They go to a person and say, in all their power. 'You swear thits and you swear that, you know that you know it.' What did they do? Why, they gave a lot of ignorant Negroes to understand that they must come over here and swear that the statements they over here and swear that the statements they had made to Mr. Collins as a notary public were false.

Col. Crawford then discussed the letters of Jackson to Pearl Bryan, pointing out vividly and eloquently that the communications were entirely free of any mention or suspicion of wrong-doing or even intimate friendly rela-tions between Jackson and Miss Bryan before the Christmas holidays of '95-'96.

Our Conduct Severely Condemned. Paris, May 12.—The Figaro, com-menting on the attitude of the United States in relation to the rebellion in Cuba, says: "The conduct of the United States throughout the war in Cuba deserves to be severely condemn-ed. #### MAJ. GEN. W. S. HANCOCK.

The Bronze Equestrian Statue to His Memory Unveiled in Washington—The President Presides at the Ceremonies.

Washington, May 12.—The bronze equestrian statue of Maj. Gen. Winfield Scott Hancock, "Hero of Gettysburg," was unveiled Tuesday afternoon at the intersection of Pennsylvania and Louisiana avenues with Seventh and C streets, the busiest highway crossing in the capital. President Cleveland presided at the ceremony, which followed one of the most imposing military parades of a city famous for such pageants, and which was witnessed by many distinguished in the arts of peace and war who had been closely associated with the great soldier and popular idol.

The statue, pronounced by eminent critics the finest piece of equestrian art in this city, is the latest and best work of Henry J. Ellicott, whose soldiers' monuments at various places are well known. It represents Hancock as the sculptor saw him during the battle of Gettysburg, a picture which Mr. Ellicott declares was indelibly impressed on his memory, and which he has ever since aspired to reproduce.

The bronze stands 14 feet 6 inches from the plinth to the crown of the hat, surmounting an elaborate stone base 19 feet high. The soldier's face wears an expression of calm determination and dignity as his horse prances under the restraint of tightly drawn reins. The statue has the further distinction of being the first statue of an army officer in Washington to be erected wholly at the expense of the government, the numerous others having been secured through societies of army survivors.
